

Frequently Asked Questions

Q: What kind of school is Will Smith Zoo School?

A: Will Smith Zoo School is a nature-based preschool for children aged three to five. Students spend at least 70% of their day outside engaging in a rich play environment. Will Smith Zoo School brings together the tenets of high-quality early childhood education and environmental education, with a focus on connecting young children to animals and nature for the benefit of both the child and the natural world. Inspired also by the Reggio Emilia approach, the preschool follows an emergent curriculum philosophy guided by the principles of the North American Association for Environmental Education (NAAEE) and the National Association for the Education of Young Children (NAEYC). Daily field trips to the zoo offer the child rich experiences in animal and plant interaction, global awareness, nature play, and the many ways the zoo community works together.

Family Conferences are held before school starts and at the end of the school year. Meetings with staff can be requested if necessary.

Q: How are children assessed?

A: We assess students through observation on school readiness guidelines set by Texas Education Agency and on nature connectedness. Our Learning Outcome Assessments review key skills for success in the Pre-K environment and are tied to the recommended Texas Pre-Kindergarten Standards, and overall Kindergarten readiness skills. Our Nature Based Assessments review our three tenants: Compassion, Resiliency, and Innovation. These are the three pillars of our program and areas we strive to develop with each student.
